'The essence of despotism with the shadow of freedom.' Sheffey.

It is very possible that a nation possessing the freest and the best constitution of government, may suffer tyranny of the worst kind, and at the same time all the forms of its constitution kept up. It is very possible that it may be so hereafter with our own nation. To effect this there is no need that either branch of the legislature should be abolished; they may each continue nominally as they are; also the judiciary may nominally possess all it present powers.—— There is no need expunging from our constitution a single article that was meant to guard the public liberty; nay, let it be guarded and fenced, if you please ten times more strongly, if possible, than it now is, yet in spite of all these precautions an horrible tyranny, under the specious guise of freedom may be practised, and all our constitutional barriers nevertheless remain unbroken.

All this may be effected in a great measure by influence arising from the power of bestowing offices and other favors. Whenever a president of the United States can by these or by another means, obtain such influence in the senate and in the house of representatives, as to lead a majority of them to adopt his measures, not from their own conviction, but because they are his measures, his single will becomes an omnipotent, and it were better, as the expence would be less, that he should govern alone, than that there should be two great bodies of men to maintain at the public charge merely for the purpose of registering his edicts.

We will state a few serious facts, that our readers may clearly see what may be, from what actually has been. When Mr. Jefferson proposed laying on the embargo, a rash and foolish measure that cost this country not less than forty or fifty millions of dollars, and diverted from it, probably forever, several of the channels of its former commerce; when Mr. Jefferson proposed this measure fraught with evils to the country, and the minority in the senate asked time to deliberate, up starts an honorable senator, who has since been rewarded with a mission to Russia, and said, "I would not deliberate, I would act," plainly manifesting that he meant to be guided implicitly by the president's will and pleasure. And it is evident from the result that the majority of both houses of congress, at that time, were brought down to this ignominious grade of obsequiousness to presidential authority, though only a single individual among them openly avowed it. The president, in that instance, governed absolutely according to his own will, just as much as though all constitutional forms were done away, and he were emperor of this country.

The enforcing act passed through all our republican forms; it was voted by clear majorities of both houses of congress; majorities devoted to the will of an individual —To those who suffered under that horrible act of tyranny and oppression was it any comfort to reflect that that they suffered by law, passed according to republican forms, by a majority of their own representatives? What could have been the difference to them, whether the oppressive act were the act of an individual despot, or of his minions, called the representatives of the people? Whether they suffered this oppression under Turkish despotism, or under the forms of a free constitution?

Mr. Madison has taken his attitude;— towards England it was a menacing warlike attitude. What then? If he had acted imprudently and rashly, or from mere personal prejudice and resentment, was there no remedy? None. For according to the language of another honorable senator, when the president has taken his attitude, it is too late even for congress to make opposition! And how did the doctrine take with congress? Mighty well, for in conformity to it, Gile's war resolutions passed by great majorities, though the absurdity of them, all things duly considered, must be evident to every man of common sense.— They passed, and the president actually put his signature to this non-descript law. Purporting that he had acted wisely and honorably in dismissing Mr. Jackson, and enjoining it upon the public to shape their minds and opinions accordingly? Can we now say with Solomon that there is nothing new under the sun? We defy all history to produce a similar act since the sun first shone.

What has hitherto passed, has been mere farce and comedy. But put the case that this farce and comedy should eventuate in a bloody tragedy. Suppose this measure of extreme absurdity, weakness, and folly should occasion a ruinous war; would it console the public, after suffering the loss of hundreds of millions of property and many thousand lives, to be told that the war, though a single individual, or some half a dozen individuals were its efficient cause, was nevertheless brought on according to republican forms?

An eminent writer has remarked that England never groaned under a more horrible tyranny than in the reign of Henry the eighth, a tyranny that was carried on by a concert between the king and the parliament —Much innocent blood was shed in that barbarous period, but yet the victims of despotism suffered agreeably to the forms of law. Alarming strides towards this awful state of things have been making in this country for these three years past, and are yet making. Look at the gag rule; if that rule were established, (and a majority would establish it if they dare do it) our constitution would be scarce worth a button —We should have as Mr. Sheffey, a democratic member of congress, well observed upon it, "The essence of despotism with the shadow of freedom."

From the Independent American.

"Patriotism," said Dr. Johnson, "is the last refuge of a scoundrel." "Patriotism," said Dean Swift, "is the madness of many for the benefit of a few." These two definitions have been often quoted, but seldom fully considered. Johnson, by "patriotism," means only the profession of it by those who have risen or mean to rise to offices of emolument, of honor or of power. Swift, by the same word means the warmth of its reality among the great unthinking bulk of society. Johnson's patriotism ascends by apparent zeal and outrageous affection for his country. If out of office he is sure to condemn the men who are in office and all their measures. His whole aim is to dislodge them, that he may vault into their seats. At one time he assumes the garb of candor and moderation, and condemns with ostensible reluctance but real pleasure. At another time he would dethrone power by violent declamation and open hostility. Every flaw in public characters is magnified into an atrocious crime. Every virtue is forgotten. Improper motives are ascribed to every act, whether of a public or a private nature. Prudence is denominated cunning; economy parsimony; generosity profuseness; ardor madness; coolness calculation; forbearance fear. Every virtue is considered a vice, and every act is bottomed in selfishness.— His eye is fixed on promotion; and he knows how to obtain it by the help of the thoughtless many. 'Tis but to pretend unlimited affection for the people: to convince them that those in power are corrupt, and that better men ought to supply their place. When in office, his first labor is to serve himself. If this can be effected without injury to his country 'tis well; but he must serve himself: rem, recte si possis, si non quocunque modo rem; whether the res be wealth, power or fame. He now preaches unity of sentiment; the authority of government; the necessity of supporting the powers that are. Those who are out of office, and are using the same means to obtain it that he had himself previously used, are denounced as disaffected, dangerous and rebellious.

But the patriots of Dean Swift are the most numerous, being about nine tenths of society; honest, perhaps, but too little informed on great political subjects, to know whether their votes or their exertions will be beneficial or injurious to their country. These are the dupes of the Johnson patriots. Some imbibe certain principles, and adhere to certain men and measure, not from their goodness or propriety, not from any knowledge or capacity of their own, but from reading certain publications; from being so intrusted by those who have more leisure and more means of information; from a strife for victory: from a hope for reward; from passion; from prejudice;— from mere party spirit. Such patriots are led hither and thither, with as much ease, and are under as strict discipline, as regiments are under the control of their Colonels, or armies under the authority of their Generals. And it may with strict truth be said that passion, party spirit, prejudice, misrepresentations, falsehoods and the want of a full and correct knowledge of men and of the tendency of measures, are such powerful preventatives to the exercise of their patriotism, that not more than one out of ten, perhaps, not more than one out of fifty, knows whether his vote is calculated to benefit or to injure his country. Hence we can account for the popularity of such men as general Smith and W. B. Giles, and for the election of Jefferson to the presidency. For no man in his senses, who is well acquainted with the character of the late president can suppose that setting aside the interested, the dishonest, and the incapable, he could have received an hundred votes in the United States.

Far the larger part of Swift's patriots, whether called whigs, tories, democrats, federalists, or any thing else, are not culpable for belief or exertion. Educated, a mahometan the Turk spurns a christian infidel; educated a christian the believer condemns the unbelieving Jew. Their principle and their conduct do not arise from corruptness of heart. The same may be said of most patriots.

How are four fifths of the voters in the U. States to know the character of a candidate for the presidency? A. B. C. &c. are farmers and mechanics, and these professions constitute the bulk of voters. But few of them have time, or inclination, or opportunity, to be well informed of a great character with whom they are unacquainted. Hence the total uncertainty whether the best, or even one of the best men in the union, be elected to that office. And hence the chance of success is about equal for a Washington or a Jefferson.

Translations for the Philadelphia Gazette.

CADIZ, Feb 9.

The Supreme Junta of this place does not loose sight of, or omit any means which can contribute to the public convenience, and at the same time not diminish the means of defence. In addition to the numerous measures hitherto adopted, it has been published that navigation is free, and that all vessels may depart for their respective destinations, provided they do not take with them provisions, which must be left for the sustenance of the inhabitants. Vessels departing must in other respects conform to thd regulations of the port.

The government has observed with no little regret, the little assistance afforded by the inh abitants in constructing and fortifying the parapet and battery of San Fornando; and it again calls upon the citizens, in hopes that coercive measures may be unnecessary.

The regiment of patriots which was in garrison in this city, has received its full complement of arms, ammunitions, &c. and measures are taking to organize the militia, for the better defence of the city.

According to advice from Lisbon, we may every moment expect 5000 British troops with 8 ships of the line. We also look for reinforcements from Gibraltar.

The enemy on the 7th in the morning, were seen falling back to the Puerto Real, in conseqence of the fire from our boats; notwithstanding which they afterwards advanced, and were fortifying themselves at the battery Del Commercio, keeping up a constant fire of musquetry on our boats, who continued to annoy them.

Another division of 500, with 5 pieces of flying artillery, proceeded the same evening to the Trocedaro, where they had to shelter themselves in the magazines, so smart was the fire of our ships and gunboats.

According to accounts from Puerto and Xerez, it appears, that the enemy, no longer able to conceal their true character, have commenced their accustomed outrages on the peaceable inhabitants. This is the happiness they offer to those who treacherously adhere to their cause.

The whole of yesterday, with but short intervails, we witnessed the fire of our gun boats, of the English and of the ship San Juste, upon the Trocadero. The enemy has not shewn himself at a single point.

According to letters from Isla, the enemy has sent a column of 1500 men to Checlana. They also say, that the advanced guard has been beaten with great loss to the enemy, as well upon the road del Arreclife, as also by the fire it sustained from Gallineras.

The regiments of patriots has set out for La Isla.

We have just received news from Madrid as late as the 17th January. The enemy has concentrated all his force to invade Andalusia. 1500 men only remained in garrison at Madrid, and 1000 at Toledo.— In Desperraperros they have left 2,000, and a strong detachment in Carolina. By the same conveyance, we are informed that they have received no fresh reinforcements from France; and that Gen. Blake is at Cuadix, where he has collected the dispersed, and was incorporating into his army all the peasants, who flocked to his standard in great numbers.

By order of the government, packet boats have been established for the purpose of maintaining a correspondence with places not in possession of the enemy.

Don Clemente Darilla Barroso, deacon of the city of Carteya, writes as follows, Feb. 6—The only news I have to communicate is, that yesterday an officer arrived here with an official despatch from Le Sig. Romana, informing that his advanced guard had reached Los Santos, and that his army amounted to 70 thousand men, and shortly expected a reinforcement of 15,000.

The following appears to be an address to his countrymen, from an individual who had fled from the enemy, and arrived in Cadiz:

Brave Spaniards! whom the present misfortunes of our country have compelled to seek refuge within the walls of this city, and where you have found a welcome reception; one, associated in your disasters, one, who like you, faithful to our beloved Ferdinand VII, has abandoned his property, rather than be a slave or victim of a daring enemy, now addresses you. This is the moment to shew to the nation, to our august sovereign, and to the generous inhabitants of Cadiz, that if fate and our loyalty have forced us to take refuge in this city, and to consume part of the subsistence of its faithful citizens, we do not mean or wish to be selfish or useless members of it, in the defence of it against the common enemy.

On the contrary, let us hasten to present ourselves to the junta of government, and offer them our services. Those who are able to bear arms, fly to the standard of our country! and let those who are unfit for this service employ themselves in useful labors, or lend their experience and information to government to mitigate their incessant fatigues. Thus shall the people of Cadiz have reason to bless the day of our arrival, and not consider us as a burthen to them under their present trying circumstances.

NEW YORK, April 4.

By the brig Hiram from St. Bartholomews, we have received a file of Martinique Gazettes. They contain nothing interesting except a list of arrivals. A Te Deum was ordered to be sung at St. Pierres, in all the churches on the 11th of Feb. on account of the capture of St. Martins.

Accounts from Guadaloupe, via. St. Bartholomews, state that general Ernouf with about two thousand French prisoners of war sailed for England on the 13th of February.

NEW BEDFORD, March 30.

FRENCH PLUNDER.

Captain S. Merrihew, of the Palinurus, of New Bedford, whose capture has been formerly noticed, has written to his friends here, informing them that the valuable ship the Francis and Mary of New Bedford had been condemned by the French council of prizes on the 19th of Nov. last.——He further states that the consignees of one American ship had compromised and obtained a restoration of the ship from the captors, upon a payment of tribute amounting to upwards of seventy thousand dollars!— Captain Merrihew says, that although such a procedure is very objectionable, he intends to proceed in the same way with his ship if he can.

The account of captain Merrihew is also confirmed by the following extract of a letter received by the owners of the Francis and Mary, dated,

Paris, Nov. 14, 1809.

SIR—I regret that I am compelled to inform you of the fate of the ship Francis and Mary. The ship and cargo were condemned by order of the council of prizes on the 9th instant. I calculated to return home in the ship Madison, from Dieppe, she will sail in fifteen days. She has been captured on a voyage from Baltimore bound to Amsterdam, and had not violated any decree.— The captors have compromised with the consignees to restore the ship, receiving for their claim four hundred thousand livres, and all others in like situation will endeavor to settle in the same way."

Capt. M'Cobb of the brig Helen arrived at this port yesterday from Madeira informs that he spoke a ship from Cadiz bound to Madeira, having on board the American consul, who had left Cadiz on his way to Philadelphia in consequence of the near approach of the French to that place.

A Scholar's Pretensions.——Erasmus Root, member of Congress, from New-York, Dr. [to the School Fund] dollars 000.——He is the man, who on application of Gen. Hamilton's widow, for the half pay of her husband, observed in Congress "that New-York had taken care of its poor:" We here have a view, in part, of the manner in which it has been done!—— How base and infamous was it in the pensioned beggar, while rioting on the spoil of the poor school, thus to insult the widow and orphans of an old and distinguished revolutionary officer. Goshen Patriot.

PHILADELPHIA, April 7.

LATEST FROM PORTUGAL.

Yesterday arrived schr. Hound, captain Gamble, 44 days from Lisbon. By him we receive the following verbal information—that the British army were at Coimbra, and the French at Badajos, having the river Tagus between them. That the British transports and many vessels were laying in readiness, should the British meet with any disaster, the transports to take off the troops and the Americans and others to take off such of the inhabitants that wish to fly. That he saw London papers as late as the 29th of Jan. in which was the king's speech delivered on the 27th to the parliament, the contents of which as far as he remembers, was so conciliatory towards America, that a number of British agents that had came out to Lisbon to purchase cotton and other American produce, stopped any further contracts for those articles.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, April 9.

[Taken for the Alexandria Gazette.]

Mr. Johnston from the committee of claims made sundry reports on private petitions, which were disposed of.

Mr. Fisk after some prefatory remarks, offered the following resolution, which after some debate and sundry motions for postponement, was laid on the table for consideration.

Resolved, That the apportionment of the representatives among the several states, according to the third enumeration of the inhabitants, ought to be in the ratio of one representative to inhabitants, and that a committee be appointed to bring in a bill accordingly.

The invalid pension bill was taken up, and after sundry amendments it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading tomorrow.

Mr. Rhea called for the order of the day on the post road bill. It was taken up in committee of the whole, Mr. Bassett in the chair.

Acting a PUN.

In a room full of ladies and gentlemen, a lady requested a gentleman who sat next to the fire place to ring the bell. "I never before," said the gentleman, "heard of acting a pun; for once I will try." So saying he rose, pulled a gold ring from his finger, approached the lady who had requested him to ring the bell, and who was the finest lady in the room, and deliberately put the ring on one of her fingers; saying "it is with much pleasure indeed that I obey your orders, and thus ring the Belle.

"To tell such woes who can refrain a tear."

In announcing to the public the death of an amiable and respectable character, we feel a pang commixed with pleasure—pain for a real loss, for such it really is—a pleasure in declaring to others the virtues whose exit we deplore—Like the angels of joy and grief concomitant, they at the same moment exalt and sink our spirits! To these ideas I am led in making it thus known, that on the 7th day of March, departed this life at Dipple, on the banks of the Potomac, in Stafford, MR. HAWKIN STONE, the elder, in the 63d year of his age. Unmerited praise too often deserves the epithet of flattery, while pleasing truths deserve applause. With truth we may justly say of Mr. Stone, that in every scene of life he was and is deserving of applause, or the warmest commendation. As a man, just, honest, correct and punctual, in his dealings—as a parent, was attentive and kind—as a master—mild, humane and generouss—obliging as a neighbor—open and social as a friend: Those who knew him as such were his warm admirers, and felt for him that degree of love and respect ever produced by such good qualities. Happy, fortunate, would it be for mankind, were men of such a turn more numerous. Admired, respected, while living, regretted now dead. Mr. STONE's philanthropy of't led him to acts of kindness to others that were finally prejudicial to his interests. And from an act of this kind his end was accelerated. At his age the human frame insensibly feels the effects of time, and added weights hurry on our dissolution. From becoming security for the acts of a neighbor, Mr. Stone was in a short space subjected to the payment of sums, which, in a measure, impaired a plentiful and unincumbered estate, and produced annuities, which, praying on his mind, hurried him, if not altogether, yet in an earlier period, to the close which we lament. Pity it is that such should ever be the effect of an act to serve another. But it it is, alas! the lot of humanity.

"But drop the scene, the fatal dye is cast,
Not heaven itself has power o'er the past;
Farewell, dear friend, we much thy loss deplore,
But pleased, suppose thee landed on that shore,
Where virtue ever finds a seat of bliss.
World, endless, happy, far removed from this,
Where man no more will dread a tyrants rod,
But see at once his Saviour and his God"
